The 2019 conference will feature Process Education programs from across the world and explore how and why they are able to accomplish an increase in student success and equity. The lens of Universal Design will be applied to the research questions on human performance and the elements of the Classification of Learning Skills. Academic programs, courses, and instructional activities will be studied to understand how learning to learn and self-growth are philosophies that produce growth and integrated performance in all courses. Universal engagement will be highlighted to showcase how critical processes of facilitation, mentoring, assessment, and servant leadership are integrated to produce high-achieving learners and educators.

Conference Goals

- Share innovations for engaging with all learners
- Advance curriculum design practice at program, course, and activity levels
- Explore strategies for integrating Service Learning, Problem- and Team-Based Learning
- Incubate research how empowering learners produces enhanced student learning outcomes
- Effectively use online technology for conference design/delivery, addressing both the asynchronous needs of preparation and documentation and synchronous needs of delivery and interaction

With a variety of online workshops and sessions, you can BE there without being THERE. Register as an online participant!
